TWO BOOKS.

If all the kind words you ever have said

Were printed and bound in a book,

With every laugh and every smile

And every affectionate look,

And all your unselfish and generous deeds

And all of your duties well done,

And all disappointments you've cheerfully borne—

Yes, every single one—

And then if another book were to be made,

Containing your frowns and your scowls,

Containing your cross words and angry retorts,

Your fretful and querulous growls.

Each duty neglected or carelessly done.

Each pettish and petulant fear—

Then if these two books were stood up side by side,

Which one would be larger, my dear?

—Edith Holt.

"Politeness," said Senator Gallinger, in the hope of alling a rather acrimonious argument in Concord, "always pays."

His flushed listeners looked up at him in inquiry, and he smiled and repeated:

"Politeness always pays. Two little girls I knew were set before a plate containing two bunches of grapes—one a very large and tempting and perfect bunch, the other small and hard and green."

"The two little girls looked at the two bunches for a space in silence. Then the polite child said:

"Is oo gweedy?"

"No," the other answered; "It's not a bit gweedy."

"Then," said the first, "oo choose."

Lord Chesterfield has described New Year as "The most lying day of the year—a time when the kindest and warmest wishes are exchanged without the least meaning." One hardly expects to hear a sentiment of this kind emanating from such a source of exquisite politeness. Still, one is obliged to acknowledge that there is a certain amount of truth in the statement, but fortunately all-powerful fashion has changed the social character of this day, and we hope has also raised the moral standard. The old-time custom of New York calls was doubtless responsible for the greater number of these Supphras and Annalses. The custom of general calling has now practically died out, but the beautiful spirit of hospitality survives in no less attractive forms and is found delightfully expressed in merry week-end holiday parties and jolly New Year eve spreads offered by hostesses to friends whom they are genuinely glad to entertain on the advent of the New Year.

In connection with this holiday we are also adopting many foreign ideas. From the French we have borrowed the charming custom of giving presents to friends and acquaintances. And if one is interested in tracing this idea to its fountain head she may read in old records that the new year was celebrated in Japan and China by men and women setting forth at dawn to make visits and to carry gifts. The Romans, too, spent the day in a round of calls for the purpose of making gifts and wishing each other a happy New Year. But the fashion of paying and receiving calls is not likely to die out altogether so long as the chief magistrate at Washington welcomes on that day all who wish to pay their respects to him.

There is an old saying that if you welcome the new year with toasts and good things to eat plenty will attend you all the year. An oyster supper with novel decorations is a nice little feast for a New Year eve spread. For the menu something on the following order would be attractive: Oyster cocktails in green peppers, oyster soup and croquettes and chicken with oyster sauce. The ices could be served in the shape of an oyster. Table decorations for such a supper can be made both pretty and appropriate.

An original centerpiece is a small sailing vessel placed on billows of green cheese-cloth. The table, of course, will be bare and polished, save for the doilies. Heaped around the nautical centerpiece is a small rockery of oyster shells. At the end of the supper each guest pulls a ribbon attached to these shells, which contain funny little gifts. Dainty favors are white cardboard boxes trimmed with imitation seaweed. On each box is written a quotation relating to the oyster. Such as: "An oyster may be crossed in love," "He was a bold man that first ate an oyster," "The world is my oyster," etc.

It is not always for the mere gratification of personal vanity that we should attentively study our mirrors. Socrates advised all young people to look often in their looking glass to ascertain if they were good looking—that if they were so they might strive to make their mental attainments correspond, and if they were not, then they might endeavor by the superior accomplishments to their minds, to make up for their personal shortcomings.

This is excellent advice for vanity-possessed moderns, but it is improbable that the high mental attitude of Socrates is appreciated by them. How the elaborate toilets of today could be accomplished without the aid of the mirror it is impossible to imagine. It is popularly supposed that the mirror is the woman's pet possession, but man is by no means averse to contemplating his manly charms as reflected therein. A woman frankly confesses her interest in the alluring combination of glass and quicksilver, but the man, while voicing his scorn, proves his superior vanity by his concealed and secretive study of it. He jeers at his wife's cheval glass, but was anything more entirely provocative of human vanity ever invented than the many-sided shaving glass!

If all the good resolutions to "turn over a new leaf" with the New Year take effect, there is bound to be a mighty rustling through the length and breadth of the land as the last night of 1906 wanes and the clock ticks out the moments of the dying year.

For the house mother, who is at heart conscientious, faithful and true as steel in all big things, there are no great statutory faults to be confessed and uprooted, but oh! what an infestation of the little foxes that spoil the symmetry of the pleasant household vine! Impatience, nagging, "nerves" and worry, false pride, extravagance, disorder, dilatoriness, white lies and a predilection for idle gossip that puts one in the same boat with the Navajo woman whose name is a reproach to her "Esthara Chutly." "The woman who talks too much." Fortunately no one of us has all these faults of a "patty pan" order to combat, else we might give up in despair. As it is, let us each look our own special failing square in the eye, determined that the New Year shall find us striving after better things. So "let us grasp with energy the homely, every-day, practical possibilities within our power, and count that we have done no small thing toward the general good when in a cleanly, honest, home, living within our incomes, we are bringing up our children in love and wholesome simplicity. Let us make our small neighborhood bright with cheerful energy, and if the world moves onward, let us rejoice that our shoulder is pressed against the wheel of its progress with life-giving force. Not a woman of us all but has her work to do. Let us do it with a will."

A teacher in one of the schools was giving a lesson on the circulation of the blood. Trying to make it clearer, she said:

"Now, children, if I stood on my head the blood, as you know, would run into it, and I should turn red in the face."

"Now, Jimmy," continued the teacher, addressing a small boy, "what I want to know is this: How is it that while I am standing upright in the ordinary position the blood does not run into my feet and turn them red?"

"Why, because yer feet ain't empty."

Mary Manning has just presented her new play by Rida Johnson Young, "Glorious Betsy." This new play has for its central figure that radiant belle of yesterday, Betsy Patterson, whose beauty and ambition made for her one of the most remarkable careers ever attained by an American woman. From the position of a Baltimore belle, whose wit, pride and rather daring independence made her the admiring comment of all fashionable society in America, she sprang suddenly into international notice by her marriage with Jerome Bonaparte, the brother of Napoleon, just at the time when he was proclaimed emperor of the French. In writing "Glorious Betsy" its author does not go into the darker side of Betsy's life, but deals with those days when her name was the toast of every gathering of note from Baltimore to New Orleans. It harks back to the old Sweet Springs of Virginia, when that resort was the gathering place for the best in wealth and culture and beauty of which America could boast. It is at the springs that Betsy first meets Capt. Bonaparte, who, weary of the endless round of entertainment he has received as the guest of the American nation, has traveled to this out-of-the-way resort incognito. Jerome becomes infatuated with the reigning belle, Betsy Patterson, and manages to have himself employed during her stay there to give her lessons in French. Betsy becomes intensely interested in her tutor, but her pride and ambition fights against acknowledging that she could love a man in such an inferior position.

She coquettes with him, however, as she does with half a dozen others. Betsy leaves the springs ignorant of Jerome's true personality, deeply offended with him because of his refusal to accompany her party to Baltimore, where great preparations are being made for the reception of Capt. Bonaparte. It is here at an elaborate fete given in his honor that Betsy first discovers that her tutor and the much-talked-of brother of Napoleon are one.

They are betrothed and the rest of the play deals with the efforts of Napoleon's agents to prevent their marriage.

BOYS WENT TO IT.

Eight thousand newboys in Chicago were given a Thanksgiving dinner. They demolished 500 turkeys and chickens, 1500 loaves of bread, 1500 dozen cakes, 150 bunches of bananas, two barrels of cranberries, 25 ten-gallon cans of mashed potatoes, 1500 pies, 25 boxes of oranges, 25 barrels of apples, 25 boxes of celery, figs, dates, raisins and nuts unscheduled. Besides 10 barrels of lemonade and wound up with over seven thousand six hundred and forty-nine belly-aches.—Ex change.

American Intervention in Cuba

Last August an insurrection broke out in Cuba which it speedily grew evident that the existing Cuban Government was powerless to quell. This Government was repeatedly asked by the then Cuban Government to intervene, and finally was notified by the President of Cuba that he intended to resign; that his decision was irrevocable; that none of the other constitutional officers would consent to carry on the Government, and that he was powerless to maintain order. It was evident that chaos was impending, and there was every probability that if steps were not immediately taken by this Government to try to restore order, the representatives of various European nations in the island would apply to their respective governments for armed intervention in order to protect the lives and property of their citizens. Thanks to the preparedness of our navy, I was able immediately to send enough ships to Cuba to prevent the situation from becoming hopeless; and I furthermore dispatched to Cuba the Secretary of War and Assistant Secretary of State in order that they might grapple with the situation on the ground. All efforts to secure an agreement between the contending factions, by which they should themselves come to an amicable understanding and settle upon some modus vivendi—some provisional government of their own—failed. Finally the President of the republic resigned. The quorum of Congress assembled failed by deliberate purpose of its members, so that there was no power to act on his resignation, and the Government came to a halt.

In accordance with the so-called Platt amendment, which was embodied in the constitution of Cuba, I thereupon proclaimed a provisional government for the island, the Secretary of War acting as provisional governor until he could be replaced by Mr. Maguon, the late Minister to Panama and Governor of the canal zone on the isthmus; troops were sent to support them and to relieve the Navy, the expedition being handled with most satisfactory speed and efficiency. The insurgent chiefs immediately agreed that their troops should lay down their arms and disband; and the agreement was carried out. The provisional government has left the personnel of the old government and the old laws, so far as might be, unchanged, and will thus administer the island for a few months until tranquility can be restored, a new election properly held, and a new government inaugurated. Peace has come in the island; and the harvesting of the sugar cane crop, the great crop of the island, is about to proceed.

When the election has been held and the new government inaugurated in peaceful and orderly fashion the provisional government will come to an end. I take this opportunity of expressing upon behalf of the American people, with all possible solemnity, our most earnest hope that the people of Cuba will realize the imperative need of preserving justice and keeping order in the island. The United States wishes nothing of Cuba except that it shall prosper morally and materially, and wishes nothing of the Cubans save that they shall be able to preserve order among themselves and therefore to preserve their independence. If the elections become a farce, and if the insurrectionary habit becomes confirmed in the island, it is absolutely out of the question that the island should continue independent; and the United States, which has assumed the sponsorship before the civilized world for Cuba's career as a nation, would again have to intervene and to see that the government was managed in such orderly fashion as to secure the safety of life and property. The path to be trodden by those who exercise self-government is always hard, and we should have every charity and patience with the Cubans as they tread this difficult path. I have the utmost sympathy with and regard for them; but I most earnestly adjure them solemnly to weigh their responsibilities and to see that when their new government is started it shall run smoothly, and with freedom from nagrant denial of right on the one hand and from insurrectionary disturbances on the other.
